National Donate Life Month

Donating an organ is a selfless and potentially life-saving gesture. More than 125 million people are currently registered as organ donors, but only 3 out of 1,000 people can actually donate when they die, according to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. This means there is a great need for registered donors.

No matter your age or health status, you can still be a donor. Due to the complicated nature of organ donation, it typically takes years after registration before organs can be donated. However, registration is the necessary first step.

Some of the organs and tissues you can donate include kidneys, liver, heart, pancreas, corneas, bone marrow and tendons. Regardless of what you choose to donate, your gesture will be used to help save or enhance someone's life. Learn more about organ donation and involvement opportunities by visiting organdonor.gov.
